

Where the interior sends the people it loses

Everyone holding an interior-apparatus post on the eve of a rupture who took a further post within five years, by where that post sat. Each panel is one cohort on one scale, so how much the apparatus keeps and how the rest divides are read together. The row beneath each rupture is the same cohort drawn from five ordinary years of its own era. The apparatus keeps more of its own after every rupture than its era does ordinarily — 54%, 60%, 70% against 52%, 56% and 66%. The social ministries take the largest identified share of what it loses in 2011 and 2021 (33%, 39% of their leavers), in ordinary times as much as after the rupture. 1987 is not comparable on this: its largest single bucket is the bodies the record will not place.
