

The Tunisian state, ministry by ministry

Every ministry the Journal Officiel records between 1957 and 2026, with the five bodies beneath each that carry the most below them, and a count of the rest. 8,803 bodies in all. The gazette publishes no parent field, so every attachment here is inferred and the marker says from what: 2,961 from the body's own name, which states it outright — “direction générale des services communs au ministère de l'équipement” — 4,783 from the parent its appointment acts most often name, 93 from the portfolio it carries. A further 966 bodies are not drawn here because nothing placed them under any ministry. Successive names of one ministry are collapsed, so équipement and équipement et habitat are one row rather than two. This is a union of seventy years: the ministries listed never all existed at once.

how each attachment was established

- its own name says so
- the parent its acts name
- the portfolio it carries
- nothing placed it

Source: Journal Officiel de la République Tunisienne, 1957–2026 (6,378 French issues, jort.tn). Author's extraction. The hierarchy is reconstructed: neither the organisations table nor the gazette carries a parent field, and the parent recorded on a spell belongs to the act the appointment was published in rather than to the body — one body carries 89 different parents that way. Attachment is read from the body's own name first, since Tunisian administrative titles state what they hang off and beat the act where the two disagree; from the commonest parent its acts give it second, and only where at least 40% of them agree; from its portfolio third. A separator alone is not an attachment — the 'des' in direction générale des impôts is ordinary French — so a name is only split where the separator is followed by a word that names a body. Where an act appoints a committee the whole membership list can land in the name field, at a median 1,051 characters against 72 for a real name, and each 'représentant du ministère de X' in it reads as an attachment; those are cut back before parsing. The count beside a body is everything beneath it, at any depth. Ministries are ordered by how much hangs off them and bodies within a ministry likewise, so the five shown are the largest branches and not the whole of what a ministry directly holds. The full register runs to 4,687 bodies at depth three alone, which no node-link chart can set legibly on a page; an explorable version carries every node, with search, a year filter and the evidence behind each attachment.
