

The Tunisian state as the gazette records it, every body at once

8,803 administrative bodies named in the Journal Officiel between 1957 and 2026, each a band whose height is the number of bodies beneath it. 89% attach to something other than the bare state. The gazette publishes no parent field, so every attachment here is inferred and the colour says from what: 2,961 from the body's own name, which states it outright — “direction générale des services communs au ministère de l'équipement” — 4,783 from the parent its appointment acts most often name, and 93 from the portfolio it carries. The 966 that nothing placed are drawn against the state rather than hidden. This is a union of seventy years and shows bodies that never coexisted.

Source: Journal Officiel de la République tunisienne, 1957-2026 (6,378 French issues, jort.tn). Author's extraction. The hierarchy is reconstructed: neither the organisations table nor the gazette carries a parent field, and the parent recorded on a spell belongs to the act the appointment was published in rather than to the body — one body carries 89 different parents that way. Attachment is therefore read from the body's own name first, since Tunisian administrative titles state what they hang off and beat the act when the two disagree; from the commonest parent its acts give it second, and only where at least 40% of them agree; from its portfolio third. A separator alone is not an attachment — the 'des' in direction générale des impôts is ordinary French — so a name is only split where the separator is followed by a word that names a body. Where an act appoints a committee the whole membership list can land in the name field, at a median 1,051 characters against 72 for a real name, and each 'représentant du ministère de X' in it reads as an attachment; those are cut back before parsing. Successive names of one ministry collapse onto a canonical node, so équipement, équipement et habitat, and équipement, habitat et aménagement du territoire are one branch and not three. Band height is the count of bodies beneath so a ministry supervising nine hundred communes is wide whatever its staff; the canonical tier and the root are this reconstruction's own scaffolding rather than bodies the register names, and are drawn in ink rather than given an evidence colour. Depth runs to 5. Bands below about one percent of a column are drawn unlabelled rather than crowded. An explorable version carries search, a year filter and the evidence behind each attachment node by node.
