

Every rupture froze the state; only two of them then replaced its personnel

Personnel acts per issue of the Journal Officiel, by month, around three changes of regime. Dividing by issues published removes the fourfold growth of the gazette between 1987 and 2011, so the panels are comparable. All three ruptures are followed within two months by a collapse in appointments. 1987 and 2011 then recover into a burst of replacement; 2021 never does.

Source: Journal Officiel de la République Tunisienne, 1957-2026 (6,378 French issues, jort.tn). Author's extraction. Baseline is the mean rate over months -30 to -13. Freeze and replacement are the lowest point of the three-month mean within twelve months of the rupture, and its highest point within thirty. Appointment and transfer acts only. In 1987 the sharpest single month precedes the rupture: Ben Ali was interior minister from April and prime minister from October of that year.