

What each rupture did first, and what it went on doing

The previous figure's ratio computed twice: over the three years after each rupture, and over the two that follow. An arrow pointing left marks a ministry the rupture reached early and then let alone; one pointing right marks an effect that arrived late. Both windows are measured against the apparatus as a whole at the same moment.

○ years 0-3 after    ● years 3-5 after (arrow points here)

Source: Journal Officiel de la République Tunisienne, 1957-2026 (6,378 French issues, jort.tn). Author's extraction. Merged ministries are counted toward each domain they merge, because the portfolio key follows the ministry's name and would otherwise break at every rename: read literally, the interior ministry makes 1.5 appointments a year before 2011 and 70 before 2021, an artefact of its having been the ministry of the Interior and Local Development until 2011. Domains with fewer than 12 appointments a year before a rupture are not plotted for it. The late window of 2021 ends with the record and covers 1.85 of its two years; rates are per year throughout, so it is noisier rather than smaller. Governorates and municipalities are the interior ministry's field administration but are filed under their own form, so its reach is understated.
